Four Steps to a Food-Safe Holiday

Food is the Main Event at nearly every major cultural celebration and ritual, including Thanksgiving. So why not make sure your holiday feast is both yummy and easy on the tummy?

With one flip of an egg timer, you can learn four simple steps to preventing foodborne illnesses. And while you're at it, impress your family and guests with a dish from our 10 Bests list of turkey and trimming recipes.

Let's get cooking. >>>

It's one-to-four easy to prepare food safely. Download the FDA's Healthy Holiday Tips.

BY THE NUMBERS /

1 in 6
Get Sick

Roughly one in six Americans will suffer from a foodborne illness each year (or 48 million people), more than 100,000 will be hospitalized and 3,000 will die. Most at risk: pregnant women, older adults and people with chronic illnesses.

165°
Minimum

The minimum internal temperature for safely serving a turkey is 165 degrees Fahrenheit at the innermost part of the bird. Use a real meat thermometer (pop-ups often fail), and take the temperature without touching a bone. Reheat leftovers to 165 F as well.

4,500
Calories

The average holiday dinner packs a calorie-laden wallop of 3,000 calories. Add in another 1,500 calories for drinks and snacks before and after the feast, and the average American can top 4,500 calories and 229 grams of fat on Turkey Day!
