Dear Subscriber,

From food to fuel, trucks move most of the freight in America. After dropping steadily since the mid-90s, the rate of truck accidents and fatalities is creeping up. Here is an overview of the issue and tips on how to avoid tangling with big trucks.

LAW JOURNAL'S LIST OF 2012

After reaching an historic low in 2009, deaths and injuries from truck accidents are on the rise. Why the turn for the worse? According to a startling report from the American Association for Justice, lax practices are forcing a growing number of unsafe trucks on the road that are often driven by overworked, underpaid and poorly trained drivers. Meanwhile, outdated insurance laws fail to provide adequate coverage for those involved in a car-truck accident. Since trucks move nearly 70 percent of our nation's freight, you should know the facts and what is being done to better protect all Americans. Dozing Driver Kills 10 People >>>

BY THE NUMBERS /

3,757
Killed

In 2011, 3,757 people died in collisions with trucks, an 11.2 percent increase over 2009. There were 88,000 injuries reported during the same period.

Only $750,000

Motor carriers are only required to maintain $750,000 in insurance per crash. Yet, damages from a fatal crash can exceed $4 million, leaving injured motorists and taxpayers to pay the difference.
